Charitable Works Fund

Next Sunday we have the third Charitable Works Fund collection for this financial year. Let me explain how we as a parish are placed with regard to our assessment and the uses to which money collected is put.

The CWF is a centralised fund for the support of charitable and pastoral works that deserve our support, precisely because they are beyond the capacities of the individual parish and need to be undertaken at the diocesan level.

These include CatholicCare, the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine (for taking the Gospel to Catholic children in state schools), St Lucy’s and St Edmund’s Special Schools and other diocesan agencies.

CatholicCare has now taken over the administration of Mary Mac’s Place, here on the Peninsula, but its chief work is the provision of help to families and children. A Early Learning Centre will shortly open in the grounds of St John the Baptist School. They already exist at Waitara, Lake Mummorah, Forestville and Terrigal. There are also Before and After School and Vacation Centres, Family Day care, in Home Care, and much besides.

The funds are raised in a number of ways, including bequests, but mainly by imposing on parishes an annual assessment. This financial year our assessment was $49,495.00. So far, our two collections have raised $12,396.20. This leaves us to find $37,098.80, and a likely annual shortfall of over thirty thousand dollars.

Over past few years I have been able to meet the shortfall from the Ancillary Fund. This was a fund created to hold donations that had attracted a tax deduction. The money held there represented the percentage deduction for contributions designated for the parish school, before the responsibility for the funding of Catholic schools was taken over by the Diocese. It remained the property of the Parish, but it could not be used for parish (non-deductible) purposes. As the CWF is tax-deductible, the best way to use it seemed to be meeting the annual CWF shortfall.

Now that money is gone. The Ancillary Fund is no more. Shortfalls in future will have to be met from ordinary parish revenue. Can you imagine the difference to parish life that will be made by a loss of thirty thousand dollars? Please be generous next Sunday.

Social Justice

Healing a global wound: The Catholic Church teaches that all people have the right to live a dignified life in their homeland. Tragically, over 45 million people around the world are displaced. This festering wound typifies and reveals the imbalances and conflicts of the modern world. War, natural calamities, persecution and discrimination of every kind have deprived millions of their home, employment, family and homeland.

The right to seek asylum: The Catholic Church teaches that anyone whose life is threatened has the right to protection. Whether because of persecution, armed conflicts, natural disasters, or economic conditions that threaten their lives or physical integrity. It is the element of persecution, threat or danger, or being forcibly displaced that gives rise to a right to seek asylum rather than to migrate through ordinary channels. www.acmro.catholic.org.au

I celebrated my 25th anniversary of priesthood six years ago during the Easter season. My friend Leslie traveled from Kabul, Afghanistan, where she lived and worked on international children’s issues. She arrived just in time to celebrate with me in Portland, Oregon.

Leslie was the parish council president where I served as a deacon in 1982-1983 in South Bend, Indiana. Leslie testified on my behalf on ordination day at the University of Notre Dame on Saturday, April 9, 1983. I have carried her voice of support throughout all these years.

Leslie gave me a special gift when I was ordained, a bottle of Scotch whisky to keep for my 25th anniversary. I carefully wrapped the bottle in bubble-wrap and wrote on a piece of masking tape: “To be opened: April 9, 2008”.

During her visit, I gathered about 25 friends around the dining room table in the rectory. I presented the bottle, still securely wrapped in its original bubble-wrap. Leslie and I opened the package with care and excitement. We tore off the wrapping and opened the yellowed box delicately. She uncorked the bottle as if it held all the hopes and memories of the past. People stood around the table in awe that our friendship had lasted and also that the bottle had survived nine moves across the country.

Leslie and I poured a small amount of Scotch into each glass. Leslie held up her glass and spoke of the day she presented me to the bishop. She spoke beautifully about my life and my years of priesthood. We laughed and cried at the same time. She toasted our friendship and our persistence in working among people in poverty. She toasted every person around the table and all of our efforts to enter into issues of life, from hungry children overseas to our homeless folks in our urban parish in Portland.

Leslie’s toast was a holy moment. The toast was not about the alcohol, but about our lives of faith and service. I glimpsed my priesthood story in resurrection light. For just a moment, I saw my sin combined with my good works. I viewed my selfishness combined with my relationships. I caught a hint of my inner struggles to reach out to people on the margins of society. This was sincerely an Easter moment for me and for my friends who witnessed it with tears in their eyes around our dining room table.

I always look forward to the Easter season because I often lose sight of my life in God’s love. Even though I realize with my entire being that God wants the best for me and the best for all people, sometimes my struggles seem to win out. My perspective is skewed when I am in pain or when suffering is never alleviated for other people. I ache for this perspective of hope all year around. I wait again for the miracle of the Easter season.

The Easter season Gospels remind me that our pain does not have the last word. I am always eager to hear the story of the disciples locked up in a room because of fear. They clung to their experience of loss after viewing Jesus’s death. However, something new was waiting for them. Christ appeared without a key. Christ released them from hiding, from the utter control that death held over them. I see this miracle time and time again when I hear about our parishioners who finally find housing, a room of their own for the first time. They unlock their own door to find shelter, relief, and satisfaction. They find their dignity again when they feel safe and secure. This miracle of freedom continues in our day and time, the miracle that turns our fear into self-respect.

I hear again in the Easter season that people gather around a table and tell stories about how life used to be and how life is today. People in recovery from addictions show me how Easter joy is rooted in the honest truth and purpose of life. The good shepherd invites us all, as we are ready, to finally surrender to love, found in Christ’s mercy and forgiveness, no matter our past mistakes. People tell stories about the chaos and ravages of addiction. Miracles happen when love is shared one day at a time.
Easter: the best for us

I realize that my own surrender to love is most difficult. I often need Leslie and other friends to remind me that the Easter season invites us all again to live the love we profess. My heart is often cramped in doubt, exactly like the disciples on the seashore. Jesus appeared to them and waited for them to recognize him. I long to be fed in full recognition of Christ's loving presence.

I know I am not alone in needing the Easter season. I have now been ordained 31 years, and I have moved around the country 10 times. My ministry is still among people who need to be reminded that love abounds over suffering and death. Leslie is still working for the global needs of children in poverty. She reminds me at Easter that we are all still loved into serving beyond our human skills and talents.
